Mr. Lincoln to adopt lenient measures toward the conquered rebels. His view was that a time must come when we shall live at peace with our enemies, that the sooner we. reach that era of peace the better, and that we can reach it sooner by adopting peaceable measures than by adopting vindictive How shall we assuage this tempest? His answer was, By throwing away the implements of war. That a majority of his countrymen demanded exemplary punishment for and left word that two men would arrive during treason is quite certain. Whether he was right or they, the next generation can deterright or they, the next generation can determine better than ourselves.

It remains for the city of Chicago, which Abraham Lincoln loved, which counts multitudes of his most cherished friends, the chief city of his own State, which contributed so much to his borhood of Bryantown, near Port Tobacco, Booth's lear heaven to painful to proceed further. The which contributed so much to his election, and where he received the nomination for his great office, to take up the mournful procession which conveys his dust to its last resting place. Of many men, we might speak of these funeral ceremonies as the last public tribute of respect which the people speak of these funeral ceremonies as the last public tribute of respect which the people would have the opportunity to pay. Not so of Abraham Lincoln. With his interment the honors to his memory will have only begun. He has so linked himself with the future constitution of our government, social condition of our people, and history of our nation, that henceforth to think of our Land is to remember Lincoln. A few weeks hence he had heped and promised to come among us at the opening of the Sanitary Fair. We had hoped to grasp his hand, to welcome the Commander-in-Chief of all our victories, the Emancipator of America, the foremost man of our age and the most powerful ruler of this century, to hear his plain but prophetic, spullinguing words to character of the sast that the fast that the form Booth's foot, the inflammation rendering it impossible to draw it. It was found, and on it was written with this, "J. Wilkes," the word "Booth" evidently having been scratebed off with a knife. Why any portion of the aname was left is a mystery, union of the rasure.

The Valuy Telegraph says: "It seems now beyond human probability that the Confederacy should conquer independence. The fall of Richmond is the catastrophe of the South."
The Post says: "Admitting the victories claimed by the Federals, they must now be about to enter on the real difficulties of their task."
In the French Chamber of Deputies, on the amendment to the address proposing a paragraph on American affairs favorable to the North, M. Eugene Pel'estan made a speech highly eulogistic of the Northern cause, and rejoicing that proslavery and rebellion was crushed by the fall of Richmond. He thought the American question ought not to have been passed over in silence in a speech from the throne and in the address. M. Pel'estan was continually interrupted by Southern sympathizers in the Chambers, and was finally compelled to desist, owing to the noise. The amendment received twenty-four votes, but was of course, like all amendments, rejected. Many prominent men abstained from voting. The address was finally voted entire and presented to the Emperor, who returned thanks in a brief speech. Plot to Burn Pailadelphia ear. Gen. Cadwallader made a proper distrib ion of the troops, and it is believed now no fu her attempt will be made. No particulars of the
